Dennis Carmichael, FASLA, LEED AP, is a licensed landscape architect with 47 years experience, spending most of his career with EDAW in Alexandria.

His work has served as a catalyst for the revitalization of many American cities, including Centennial Olympic Park in Atlanta, Wharf District Park in Boston, West Main Street in Louisville, and Ross's Landing in Chattanooga. Locally, he designed the landscape for the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office, U.S. Census Bureau, Potomac Yard Park, and Sallie Mae. He is currently leading the design of a ten acre deck park over the interstate highway in midtown Atlanta.

Dennis has received over forty design awards and his work has been published in such magazines as Landscape Architecture, Urban Land, and Architecture. He has taught at Tulane University and SUNY College of Environmental Science and Forestry at Syracuse University and lectured at numerous other colleges. He has served as national President of ASLA and also as President of the Landscape Architecture Foundation.
